RÍO MÁGICO

The Río Magdalena cast its spell on me as a child when my father took me on a trip to its source. I was enchanted by the wildly different landscapes, the colors, the textures, the sounds — the statues, whose origin is unexplained to this day — as this great river winds its way to the caribbean sea. It is a powerful source of inspiration, as well as being home to many of artisans with whom we work so closely today. Their crafts are traditional and local as are the materials with which they work, using techniques passed from one generation to the next. We are proud to present new additions to the Ames collection!

VIBRANT LIVING

In parts, the river is banked on both sides by hills, lush and green. The sky above is blue. The fishermen's boats are pink and yellow, their baskets orange, their nets silver.

UILAS

Mae Engleger is new to the Ames family and has created a rug made using different materials as well as different techniques and colors. Figue and natural wool are knotted and woven by hand in a process taking two skilled craftsmen from Santander and the Boyaca province more than three weeks.

It is extraordinary, but just a dusty stone's throw from the forest lies a desert landscape, which is also beautiful in its very own way. The color palette might be muted all of a sudden, but the light and shade thrown into relief on the dry and stony ground inspire us to play with textures and surface structures.

LA CHE

The La Che series is now available in Cuerda, a beige tone reminiscent of the sunbleached ground.

SUBAS

These new rugs combine knotted and woven areas in a technique developed by a family over generations, who now work in Suba using pure wool in all its natural tones. Sebastian Herkner has developed five designs that take twenty days of handwork to produce, and whose real beauty lies above all in their structure.

Pauline Deltour has developed big standing and wall mirrors that have frames typical of the Killa series made from fibres of the iraca palm harvested and prepared by hand before being colored using nuts, seeds, roots and leaves and woven using different needles that give different textures.
